How to choose a good-looking color for the battery cabinet

Overview

Why should you choose a kitchen cabinet color?

Your kitchen cabinets are often the first things people notice when they enter your kitchen. Whether you want to create a calm, soothing atmosphere or a lively family hub, the kitchen cabinet color you choose will have a noticeable impact on the look and feel of your space.

How do you choose a kitchen cabinet color?

'It's important to consider the orientation of a kitchen when considering cabinet colors; if it faces north, cool blues can add to the chilly feeling,' says Saskia Howard, creative director at Howark Design. 'Warmer tones such as yellow are preferable to brighten up spaces with a northerly aspect.'

What color cabinets make a small kitchen look bigger?

Small kitchens are often best served by muted colors or classic white cabinets that can make your kitchen feel larger. Shades of white, cream, sage green, or powder blue reflect light, enhancing the sense of space and making the perimeter of a small kitchen appear to recede.

How do I choose a kitchen colour?

Decide which areas will be your primary colour and which will be your accent colour. Commonly, the upper cabinets or wall units are lighter to create an airy feel, while the lower cabinets are in a darker colour to ground the space. You could also use colour to create a focal point in your kitchen.

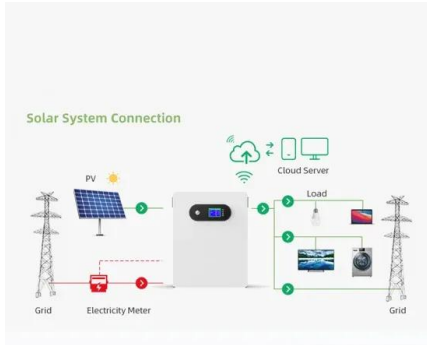

What color cabinets go best with a northerly aspect?

'Warmer tones such as yellow are preferable to brighten up spaces with a northerly aspect.' Smaller, dimly lit kitchens do better with muted or cooler kitchen cabinet color ideas as these reflect light and make the space feel airier.

Are dark black cabinets a good colour for a kitchen?

Midnight black cabinets probably aren't an ideal colour choice if your kitchen is small and window-less. If your kitchen lacks natural light, you might want to consider using a warm, bright colour to give the illusion of light inside the naturally dark space.
