Can you use electrical equipment outside?

To safely use electrical equipment outside, it's advisable to have a dedicated external power point rather than a trailing extension lead from inside your home. So, let's take a look at everything you need to know about installing an outdoor socket. Electrician Steven Jones at HomeHow.co.uk explains all below. Who can install an outdoor socket?

Do external power supplies have a power efficiency mandate?

At a global level, mandates for power efficiency exist for most consumer electronics and home appliances. External power supplies have had regulations dating back to 2004, when the California Energy Commission created one of the first mandates for efficiency of external power supplies used to power appliances or consumer electronic devices.

What are the new standards for power supply design?

In 2014, the US Department of Energy formalized their newest mandatory standard and the EU's voluntary Code of Conduct version 5 took effect. This white paper briefly explains the US and EU's new standards and what they mean to power supply designers.

Which countries adopt voluntary and mandatory external power supply standards?

Since then, the US, European Union, China and other countries adopted both voluntary and mandatory external power supply standards as part of energy conservation legislation. Table 1 shows a breakdown of some of the current voluntary and mandatory standards by region.

Can an electrician install an outdoor socket?

Only a qualified and registered electrician can install an outdoor socket. It is not a job that should be carried out as a DIY task, and the installation must comply with BS 7671 18th Edition of the Wiring Regulations.

Do outdoor sockets need a high IP rating?

Understandably, it's very important for an external socket to have a high IP rating as it is exposed to the elements all the time. While the minimum IP rating is IP44, it's advisable to have slightly higher, e.g., IP45 or better to withstand the British weather. Where to position an outdoor socket?
